

Tumbling Into Love Again
a kasen-no-renga by Morgan Bettner, Maddy Batek and Mackenzie Martin

Millikin University
May 6, 2018

Tumbling into Love Again

flowers blooming
baby fawn awakes
against his warm mother

eyes wide open
he sees leaves budding

little birds chirp
from a branch
high up above

i remember
skinned knees on trees like these

under the moonlight
the willow dips its limbs
into the water

a sigh of relief
autumnal bliss upon us again...

air begins to nip
at the leaves
as they tumble down

tumbling into love again
my poor heart can't take it

love slowly dies
as the plants outside
die as well

oh there he is again!
an ex-boyfriend

i drop a banana peel
hoping
he'll slip

instead we talk about the weather whether or not i want to

too bad the moon
is the only star
out tonight

spring fades to summer
putting on sandals

walking to the beach
trying to work
on that summer bod

feeling fresh
squatting... 20 pounds

new flowers bud
just like
my newfound strength

and i push
my shoulders back

pushing the wheelbarrow
i prepare the fields
for the new season

pushing while i pull
a natural light out

one sip
aw refreshing
i begin to chug

reflecting on...
a beautiful life

the grass
gets covered
in a white blanket

so soft
i pack up a snowball

by the warm fire
we cuddle
mistletoe just out of sight

one cup of hot chocolate shared between the two of us i love her

but yet
have no words

finding courage
i face my fears

the man in the moon
smiles down
my faithful friend

crunching my boots
on the leaf covered trail

the creek gets colder
no longer
swimming season

i throw a football
touchdown

thanksgiving
surrounded by family
i fall asleep

the children draw
on the sleepy man's face

pansies lift their heads
upwards
spring rain at last

brilliant colors
another baby born

• • •